The Road Not Taken

In a forest, two paths split, and I regretted that I couldn't walk down both of them. I stood there for a long time, looking down one path as far as I could, until it turned out of sight. Then, I chose the other path, which seemed just as good, though it was a bit less worn and grassy. In fact, both paths seemed to be equally untouched that morning. I decided to save the first path for another day, but I knew that one choice would lead to another, and I probably wouldn't return.

Later, I'll reflect on this decision, looking back with a sigh. Two paths split in the woods, and I— I chose the one less traveled, and that made all the difference.
